Outlook Darkens In Palestine

It is generally felt in Palestine that the country confronts a situation in the next few months that will once and for all re-establish complete British domination over the lawless elements. If the innocent bulk of the population suffers, well, that will be just too bad, according to Julian Louis Meltzer, in the New York Times.

Both Jews and Arabs are now seized by confusion and a sense of hopelessness over the inexorability of events. No serious-minded section of either people can contemplate equably what is happening today or what might develop tomorrow. Indeed the issue of a long-term political solution has been pushed into a secondary place while main attention is focused upon the more emotional aspects of the situation.

What most Jews and Arabs want, of course, is a restoration of peaceful conditions enabling a tranquil life to be resumed. Some Jews think this may be achieved by Britain's returning to the full discharge of her mandate. Possibly half of the Jewish population want a Jewish state in a partitioned Palestine.

On the other hand, among the second half of the Jewish population, partition is scored by right-wing groups which crave a Jewish state in the whole of Palestine. Numbers of others belonging to the center and left-wing parties oppose an exclusively Jewish state and are seeking a middle course in a Palestinian state which would confer equal political rights upon Jews and Arabs while insuring continued Jewish immigration.

The Palestine Arabs assert that they are directly affected by the [illegible] takes a toll of [illegible] last July [illegible] days against railroads, police stations, barracks and other terrorist targets.

The Palestine Arab nationalists are dead against partition, which they aver would be a wedge driven into the Arab world. They object to a Jewish state on principle, because the extent of such a state has never been clarified. But some Arabs feel that partition might

SILVER-BOUND BIBLE MARKS SWEDISH AID

The Swedish Federation of Labor has received a unique donation from the Jewish Trades Union in Palestine, a handsomely illuminated Bible bound in silver, for the help Sweden and the Swedish Federation of Labor extended to Jews during the war, especially to Jewish workers who received training in Sweden.

It was received by August Lindberg, president of the federation, who said that it had been a happy duty for the Swedish labor movement to be able to alleviate, to some degree, the effects of the inhuman persecution which the Jewish race had been exposed to during the recent "years of insanity."

At present, according to the Swedish Information Bureau, there are nearly 7,000 Jews in Sweden who are waiting for their entry permits into Palestine. Of these, 3,500 are fully employed in industry and agriculture, while the rest are in hospitals or recreation homes as a result of the treatment they were subjected to in Germany.

Request Britain End Drastic Move

[illegible] Foreign Minister Ernest [illegible] in a cable signed by Joseph M. Proskauer, president of the committee, and Jacob Blaustein, chairman of the organization's executive committee.

The cable follows:

Must Remove D. P. From Three Countries

Directors of the American Joint Distribution Committee for Austria, Italy and Germany said in Paris that it was urgently necessary to evacuate displaced persons from those three countries.

Joseph Silber, director for Austria, said it was imperative to get Jewish displaced persons out of Austria before the forces of occupation leave because of what he said was the continuance of anti-Semitism in that state. The Jewish situation in Italy is impossible, said Jacob Trobe, director for that country, because Italy, with a huge unemployment problem, cannot hope to keep the displaced persons. He added there was virtually no anti-Semitism.

In Germany, according to Leo Schwartz, Jewish displaced persons have the protection of occupation forces but there are no signs of diminishing anti-Semitism in the German population.

All directors stressed the helpful and sympathetic attitude of the United States Army in dealing with the displaced persons problem. According to Mr. Trobe, without the Army the 120,000 Jewish persons who passed through Austria would have lost their lives.

From humanitarian and economic motives Britain should admit to the British Isles the 250,000 displaced persons in the British zone of Germany, Lieut. Gen. Sir Frederick E. Morgan, former United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration chief in Europe, said in London.

Sir Frederick said that he was thinking particularly of Jewish displaced persons, adding "it is [illegible] that they should be [illegible] and destitute."

For many of the displaced persons—Balts, Ukrainians, Yugoslavs and Poles—he said there was the "shadow of the iron curtain" falling upon them like the "shadow of the pit."

In a Britain crying out for labor, added Sir Frederick, here is a solution.

Concerning the 500,000 displaced persons in all zones of Germany, Sir Frederick asked: "Can't London do better than merely speculate about the future possibilities in the Antipodes? (on the opposite side of the earth)? Can't Washington do more than consider the receptiveness of South America?"

"Unscrupulous parties may seek to exploit the displaced persons for nationalistic purposes, for these people constitute expatriated minorities," he added.

Sir Frederick lost his UNRRA job and was retired from the British Army after he had made controversial statements about "Soviet agents" among displaced persons and an "organized exodus" of Jews from Europe.

U.S. Army To Care For D.P. If Need Be

Gen. Joseph T. McNarney said that 85 per cent of the displaced Jews in the American zone of Germany "are determined to resettle in Palestine" and that the only solution was to let them go there.

The American commander said he had expressed this view to former President Herbert Hoover, on a tour for President Truman to study the problem of feeding Germany. "The only way we can settle the Jewish problem, in view of the Jews' determination to make Palestine their homeland, is to permit resettlement," Gen. McNarney said.

General McNarney, who will leave his post as theatre commander on March 15, said he did not doubt that "Zionist organizations have taken steps to indoctrinate that Palestine is the place they want to go." He added that the influx of Jews fleeing Poland had dropped almost to nothing. He said that 450,000 Jews in Rumania and Hungary "probably will go eastward to Palestine if and when a movement starts from those countries."

There are about 150,000 Jewish victims of German persecution among approximately 525,000 displaced persons in the American zone.

General McNarney said he and Mr. Hoover had "thoroughly discussed the problem of maintaining the displaced-persons population in Germany, and the ways and means the problem might be liquidated." He said the Army was prepared to care for and feed all the displaced persons in dozens of camps throughout the zone if the International Relief Organization was not ready to take over from the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation on July 1.

General McNarney seriously doubted whether the IRO would be ready to take over by that time. He said the Army would carry on "even though we have no

Haifa Home Seized, Refugee Dies In New York

Alfred Hirsch, fifty-six, a German refugee who established a successful rice mill in Palestine, died of a heart ailment in New York in the Mayflower Hotel, Central Park West and Sixty-first Street, soon after receiving a cable that the British had seized his home at Haifa, Palestine, as a punitive measure against terrorism.

Mr. Hirsch, his son, Stephen, twenty-two, and his wife, Else Stern Hirsch, arrived in New York last Dec. 24 on a business trip. Remaining at their home on Crusader Street, in the Mt. Carmel section of Haifa, were Marga, Stephen's twin sister, and a second son, Enzio, twenty-three.

Soon after the news of the taking of Mr. Hirsch's home reached New York Enzio telephoned his father to assure him that he and his sister were safe. But, according to Mrs. Kurt Stern, of 815 Park Avenue, Mr. Hirsch's sister-in-law, Mr. Hirsch expressed the belief that his mill, the Palestine Milling and Trading Company, which had amicable business relations with both Arabs and Jews, would also be taken. Worry, relatives said, precipitated the fatal attack.

In 1933, when Hitler seized power in Germany, Mr. Hirsch was forced to flee, virtually penniless, with his family from his native Hamburg. He left a comfortable home and a grain business. Going to Palestine, he opened the rice mill, said to be the first there. Like other groups of Central European refugees, he was opposed to [illegible]

Says Half Of Jews May Leave Europe

The immediate problem confronting all those who seek to alleviate the lot of European Jews is to evacuate 235,000 Jews from Germany, Austria, and Italy, Rabbi Barnett R. Brickner of Cleveland, Ohio, formerly of Holy Blossom Temple, in Toronto, one of the honorary chairmen of the United Jewish Appeal, said in Rome, Italy, at the conclusion of a fact-finding tour of Europe on behalf of his organization.

He found that Jews everywhere, except those belonging to established communities in western Europe, wished to leave the countries where they now were living, and that a large majority of them wished to go to Palestine.

The carrying out of such a vast project, said Rabbi Brickner, would take three to five years, and most of the evacuees would have to be supported, or at least aided, during that period.

As Jews move out of Germany, Austria, and Italy, Rabbi Brickner continued, their places will be taken by others from Poland, Hungary, Rumania and other countries, so that in the end it may be necessary to evacuate about half of the 1,500,000 Jews now living in continental Europe outside Russia.

In Germany and Austria, Rabbi Brickner found Jews concerned over what would happen to them when Allied troops moved out. Anti-Semitic sentiment is still strong in those countries, he reported, and Jews fear it may flare up when the Allies are no longer there to protect them.

ORT And J.D.C. To Unify Work

An intensified program of rehabilitation through vocational training for Europe's starving Jews became a certainty with an announcement that the Joint Distribution Committee and the World ORT Union would unify their activities in this field during 1947. Edward M. M. Warburg is chairman of the Committee and George Backer is president of the World ORT Union and the American ORT Federation.

Mr. Backer and Dr. David Lvovitch, vice-president of ORT, will go to Europe to confer with officials of the committee on details of personnel, projects and program.

Under the new arrangement ORT (Organization for Rehabilitation Through Training), a group with sixty-seven years of experience in the vocational training field in all parts of the world, will operate and administer the program. At present ORT has 422 training programs in Europe and JDC has 235.

Financing of the program will be carried on by JDC with funds allocated and raised through the United Jewish Appeal, which this year is seeking a record total of $170,000,000. Plans call for an appropriation of about $2,000,000 for the combined JDC-ORT operations in 1947. Last year ORT in the United States raised $800,000 for all its activities.

Spokesmen for both organizations predicted that the unification set-up would result in an appreciable extension of the vocational training program previously carried on independently. Tools, raw materials and instructors on a large scale will be supplied to Jewish artisans and craftsmen as well as to untrained persons.

Ask Truman To Intervene

The American Jewish Conference, through Henry Monsky of Omaha, Neb., chairman of its interim committee, and Louis Lipsky of New York, chairman of the executive committee, telegraphed President Truman, asking him to intervene in the Palestine crisis "to avert a major disaster threatening not only the Jewish people but also the integrity of established American world policy."

The telegram was sent after a meeting of the executive committee at 521 Fifth Avenue, New York. It declared that the threat of the British to impose martial law in Palestine was a weapon to coerce the Jewish representatives participating in the discussions in London and said most Jewish opinion in the world, including that in Palestine, condemned the violence of extremist elements. Violence, the telegram stated, is the consequence of illegal acts of the British.

The conference also announced it had cabled a pledge of support to the Vaad Leumi, the National Jewish Council in Palestine, which has refused to yield to an ultimatum of the British.

money outside. Commenting on the program, Mr. Warburg and Mr. Backer declared:

"The forward-looking step in the unification of our European activities merits the approbation and support of every American man and woman interested in the effort being waged to enable the Jews of Europe to become self-supporting elements in the economy of European countries and of the lands to which they will emigrate.

She wore a blush-white floor-length satin gown, with a net yoke neckline, in front and back, long, pointed sleeves, and a long bodice, with a skirt, very full at the back, and shaping into a long circular train. The dress was edged with guipure lace, forming epaulettes on the shoulders, a short peplum, and applique trimming on the sleeve-points. Her headdress of matching satin was edged in pearl beads and caught a long illusion tulle veil. She carried a prayer-book decorated with white orchids and streamers. Miss Norma Kussner, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore an ice-blue satin floor-length gown, with a bustle, and full in the back, and a matching puffed bandeau hat, and gloves, and carried a cascade bouquet of American Beauty roses. Marilyn Ann and Rosalie Kussner, sisters of the bride, were junior bridesmaids, dressed in floor-length dresses of peach-shaded taffeta, with headdresses of Talisman rosebuds, and matching taffeta gloves, and they carried Colonial nosegays. Ben. Goldwax, brother-in-law of the groom, was best man. The floral decorations were of tall standards of pink gladioli, and white pom-poms, with smilax and palms, and lighted candelabra. The bride's table held a wedding cake, with floral centrepieces on each side, and candles, and the smaller tables held floral centrepieces, in pink and white. Mrs. Kussner, mother of the bride, wore a floor-length gown of coral-colored crepe, with a matching flowered hat, and brown accessories, and had a spray of brown orchids pinned to her bag. Mrs. Moroz, mother of the groom, wore a grey floor-length gown, with trimming of silver beads and sequins, and a corsage of orchids. The bridal couple went on a trip to New York, and through the United States, and are living in Montreal. The bride wore for travelling, a green gabardine suit, and a grey lamb coat and hat. U.J.A. Heads Condemn Terrorists

Terrorism in Palestine was condemned in a resolution adopted by the United Jewish Appeal, now raising funds for overseas relief and rehabilitation.

It was signed by the Administrative Committee, Henry Morgenthau Jr., general chairman; Edward M. M. Warburg, chairman, Joint Distribution Committee; Rabbi Israel Goldstein, national chairman, United Palestine Appeal, and Edwin Rosenberg, president, United Service for New Americans.

The resolution said: "The Administrative Committee records its abhorrence of the terrorism that has been launched in Palestine by the two terrorist organizations whose activities have been unequivocally condemned by the Jewish Agency for Palestine and all other responsible Jewish bodies."

Copies of the resolution were telegraphed to President Truman; Secretary of State George Marshall; Senators Arthur Vandenberg and Alben W. Barkley; Representatives Joseph W. Martin and Sam Rayburn; Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt; British Ambassador Lord Inverchapel and Maj. Cyril Barkley Ormerod, head of the British Information Service.

THE CRISIS OF ZIONISM

By Joel Carmichael, Writing From Paris In The Nation

When I arrived at Basel some days before the end of the World Zionist Congress, the delegates were suffering from a particularly nasty cold spell and the baffling depression of a meeting in which the normal contentiousness had not succeeded in clarifying even the basic issues. Things were so mixed up that the delegates found it impossible to explain the situation to an outsider. I quickly gave up any attempt to keep track of the molecular shifts in the intra-party and inter-faction manoeuverings and contented myself with a strenuous effort to grasp the points of contention.

It was apparent that two, or possibly two-and-a-half, fundamental matters had occupied the Congress; one was the terrorism in Palestine; the other, the question of participation in the negotiations with the British government scheduled for London in January. Closely connected with the second was the question of Weizmann.

Formally a clear decision on both was reached. Terrorism was condemned with a fair degree of unanimity—an attempt by the Revisionists, the Zionist party closest in spirit to the Palestinian terrorists, to water down the resolution was badly defeated. And by a vote of 171 to 164, with 26 abstaining, it was decided not to go to London under "the present circumstances."

But though the division on these issues certainly constituted the public aspect of the Congress, and though all the tortuous proceedings and all the tensions and horse-trading connected with the wrangle over whether or not to "deal" with the British were crystallized in the resolutions, it would be naive to take their passage as an objective reflection of the real situation in the Zionist movement.

This question of participating in the London negotiations was naturally the hub of many speeches. In the course of the general debate—an exhausting performance in which the representatives of all Congress groups spoke as long as they could on a maximum of topics—the two attitudes on this subject were squarely opposed to each other in the speeches by Dr. N. Goldmann, who defended the affirmative position of the outgoing executive, and M. Snah, the reputed chief of the Haganah, the main defense organization of Jewish Palestine. To my mind this clear-cut confrontation of what appeared to be two diametrically opposed principles revealed, not their philosophical irreconcilability, but the exclusively tactical nature of the entire question.

For the negative position on going to the London negotiations did not by any means imply a desire to sever all relations with Great Britain, as it would have done if it had been a matter of principle; no serious proposal was made to transfer the Palestine mandate to the United Nations or some other power. This reluctance to push the argument to its logical conclusion, which could only have been a suggestion for the elimination of Great Britain, surely demonstrated that all the positions taken up were supported for tactical reasons. Considering the unfriendliness of the British government to the Zionist position ever since 1939—to say nothing of the whole past history of the mandate—these tactics seemed to have an almost compelling plausibility. What baffled me was the extraordinary blowing up of a choice of tactics into a conflict of principle; it struck me as a bizarre and hysterical waste of time.

And when talking with various "informed sources," I found it extremely difficult to keep my eye on the line of demarcation between the two factions, even when I considered only those who, I could not but assume, were genuinely actuated by principle. It is true that the Revisionists seemed sincerely to desire a complete break with Britain; but Dr. Abba Hillel Silver of Cleveland, the leader of the largest section of American Zionists, is known to have told Bevin himself that he would like nothing better than to come to London, provided he were offered a "good" partition of Palestine. Here again was a tactical attitude I found impossible to reconcile with the unbending quality of Dr. Silver's public statements.

What was most distressing from a polemical point of view was the perplexing vacuum one came up against in seeking an alternative to some form of "dealing" with Great Britain. For even the rupture of relations—whatever that might mean—when coupled with the unanimous demand for maximum immigration, to say nothing of a Jewish state, could only lead, logically and politically, to a state of war. And it is evident that the clear formulation of such a suggestion would be enough to insure its collapse.

Then there was the striking way in which the discussion of this basic issue cut across practically all party lines, with the possible exception of the Revisionists and the Hashomir Hatzair, a Socialist Zionist party with a Communist tinge and a special position on Palestinian statehood, which they would like to see take a bi-national Arab-Jewish form. The largest parties, the General Zionists and the Socialist Labor party, or Ichud, were split asunder. David Ben-Gurion, the head of the Ichud, carried on a fanatical campaign against the so-called moderate position of negotiating with Great Britain. But after keeping the Congress on tenterhooks for the better part of a week while the grueling inter-party struggle went on, he was beaten in his own party by a vote of ninety-one to thirty, and was consequently compelled by its rules to cast a public vote, in conformity with the wishes of the majority, in favor of the negotiations.

In this so-called conflict of principle I found it impossible not to see a clash of personalities. Throughout his career in the Zionist movement Dr. Weizmann has been identified as a moderate, a man whom all shades of British opinion united in respecting and who served as a sort of liaison with the British government. As such he would inevitably be against any form of terrorism and would favor, in principle, almost any kind of pacific negotiation. It may be that those Zionist groups which were genuinely intransigent on the question of "concessions" to Great Britain, such as the Revisionists and more especially Mr. Ben-Gurion's faction of the Socialist Labor Party, allowed the question to be formulated as one of principle chiefly as a method of shelving Weizmann.

Dr. Weizmann's candidacy for the presidency of the organization was intimately tied up with the question of going to London: a pro-London resolution would have allowed him to stand for president and would doubtless have insured his victory. The anti-London resolution that was actually passed by a coalition of Dr. Silver's American Zionist followers, the Revisionists, and the Mizrachi, the party of religious orthodoxy, meant, if it was adhered to, Dr. Weizmann's elimination, probably of his own volition. Contrariwise, had Dr. Weizmann been elected president before the other matter was settled—at a crucial point the Socialist Labor Party, the largest at the Congress, attempted to have the issue of the presidency and the executive dealt with before that of going to London—the passage of a resolution favorable to carrying on negotiations would have followed almost automatically. I could discover no other explanation for the insistence of most of the delegates, at any rate for public purposes, on treating this question of London as the primary one, or for the intransigence shown first by Mr. Ben-Gurion and then by Dr. Silver's American group and the Mizrachi.

But although the clash of personalities may have been a main source of the opinionated bitterness that characterized the Congress, there was another deeper reason—namely, the dilemma in which the political leadership of the Zionist movement now finds itself. If the British government has in fact decided to cut Palestine immigration to the bone, rigidly control land purchases, and exclude all discussion of statehood as a matter of principle, it is evident that the Zionist movement, which since the First World War has developed on the assumption of a continuing collaboration with the mandatory power regardless of any strains and disappointments, must cast about for some radical alternative.

However single-minded may be the yearning for Palestine throughout European Jewry, and however strong the support for Zionism throughout world Jewry, the Near East cannot be freed from the pressures of world politics; and if the Zionist leadership regards Palestine as simply one element in the relations of Great Britain, America, and the Soviet Union, it may have reached a genuine impasse. I think this sense of a really basic frustration in the upper political levels of the Zionist movement caused, first, the crumbling of party lines at the Congress and secondly its angry and impotent bogging down in purely tactical considerations.

If it is a fact that the crisis in Zionism, or at least the crisis in the political direction, is due to external causes, that is, to deteriorating relations with Great Britain, then British behavior during the past few months is especially significant. British spokesmen need only have raised their little finger in the weeks before the Congress to have fortified enormously the position of Dr. Weizmann and the "moderates." The slightest gesture of reconciliation or even of vague good-will would have enabled Weizmann to go before the Congress with some props for his position; as it was, the case his opponents made out for the futility of any further negotiations with the British government was extremely persuasive.

As a statement of the "moderate" case, even the extremely lucid and cogent speech of Dr. Goldmann for the executive gave rise to some malaise. What, after all, were they offering? What had they got to show? Dr. Weizmann and his followers were unable to point to any concession made by the Labor government on even the most trivial principle as evidence for the eventual fruitfulness of purely diplomatic bargaining. This was an extraordinary difficult position to be in, and in the end the battle was lost.

But perhaps it was lost only nominally. For the Congress broke up by transferring the power to elect an executive, and by implication a president, to the Actions Committee, a reduced image of the Congress itself; and as the delegates and visitors, exhausted by an all-night session which dragged on to five o'clock the following afternoon, prepared to leave, it was generally understood that the resolution not to go to London under the "present circumstances", in which so much time, energy, and temper had been expended, was nothing more than a shrewd twist to be got round as soon as possible by the Actions Committee. By some ingenious interpretation of the facts, it was expected that this committee would announce a change in the "present circumstances" which would enable the victors at the Congress to go to London after all.

The Socialist Labor Party, whose resolution in favor of London was overthrown at the Congress, has nevertheless since then in the Actions Committee, entered the executive, and it evidently would have done so only with the intention of accomplishing its declared desire for continued negotiation. An executive minus the Labor Party would be paralyzed; and the Labor Party, a vested interest in firm control of all key positions in the Palestinian Jewish economy and administration, cannot afford to fling itself into the abyss of meaningless defiance. In spite of all the hurly-burly at the Congress, Zionist leadership, bludgeoned into submissiveness by the grandiose forces of the epoch, may yet find that Weizmannism, if not Weizmann himself, is the most effective position in the market.

Adopt Refugee In Place Of Dead Soldier Son

When the steamship Marine Perch docked at Pier 84, North River, New York, with 721 displaced persons aboard, a new life began for one of them, Benczyen Szerman, Polish survivor of a Nazi concentration camp.

Because he is 22 years old, the same age as Berwin Gold, who was killed in Southern France on Oct. 29, 1944, while serving with the 157th Infantry, Forty-fifth Division, and is said to be his double, a home is ready for Mr. Szerman with the American soldier's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jakob N. Gold of 5945 Christian Street, Philadelphia.

Mrs. Gold notified the United Service for New Americans, 15 Park Row, which aids survivors of Nazi camps, that a son, Aaron Gold, 34, would be at the pier to greet his brother-to-be. Mrs. Gold also reported how excited she and her husband, a retired automobile dealer, were at their ward's impending arrival.

"My husband and I were both born and raised in Philadelphia," she said. "We live in a quiet residential section. We have fixed up a room for Benczyen, with brand-new furniture. We just want him to be part of the family, specially since we feel we already know him through our son serving with the American Army of Occupation in Germany, Lieut. Col. Norman G. Gold."

It was Colonel Gold who brought the young man, only survivor of a family of seven, to the Philadelphians' attention. While hiring a group of displaced persons as civilian employees for the United States Army noticed that Mr. Szerman strongly resembled his late brother. He immediately wrote his parents, asking if they would consider taking the stranger into their home. He also sent a snapshot of Mr. Szerman.

The Golds were overjoyed, says the New York Times. Through the United Service and the Philadelphia section of the National Council of Jewish Women, an affiliated organization, they made arrangements for the refugee to come to America as a quota immigrant. Mr. Gold also asked Colonel Gold to give the American consul in Munich this message: "It is my hope that the boy will replace Berwin in our hearts. My wife and I will take care of Benczyen as if he were our own son."

The marriage of Phyllis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Greenspan, 22 Forest Ridge Drive, to Edward Morrison, of Montreal, Que., took place on Sunday, January 12, at half-past five o'clock, at Hebrew Men of England Synagogue, Rabbi David Monson officiating, assisted by Cantor J. Zigelman. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. Her gown of white satin, trimmed with brocaded satin, had a Queen Anne neckline, long tapered sleeves, a fitted bodice, and semi-hooped skirt, with bustle back, ending in a long train. Her full-length veil was caught to a satin crown trimmed with irridescent sequins, and she carried a prayer book with gardenias and bouvardia. Miss Dorothy Wax, who attended the bride as maid of honour, wore a gown of king's-blue velvet, with multi-coloured taffeta trimming, with a blue velvet scalloped headdress, and carried a cascade of white carnations. Famous Minister Calls Jews Bravest

John Hayes Holmes, who rounded out his fortieth year as minister of New York's non-denominational Community Church, intends to go right on fighting for the principles he has supported all his life.

Those principles, he said, are: "Freedom, which is now threatened by totalitarianism; brotherhood, which is threatened by prejudices, fears and hatreds made deeper by the war, and peace, which means getting rid of war before war gets rid of us."

In his book-filled study at 10 Park Avenue, Mr. Holmes, who is now sixty-seven, commented that "forty years doesn't take me to the jumping-off place, although I must admit that I have more of my ministry behind me than I do ahead of me."

Speaking as a founder of both the American Civil Liberties Union and of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Mr. Holmes said he felt that the problems of racial and religious hatred in a war-rent world were almost worse now than they had ever been.

"But I'm not discouraged," the Philadelphia-born, Harvard-educated minister said. "The thing we need to realize is that brotherhood is entirely feasible."

Internationally, Mr. Holmes deplored the situation in Palestine, and castigated the British for their administration of the country.

While as a pacifist he deplored the violence of Jewish underground organizations there, he said that the point of view of Jews there —that they have reached the "breaking point"—must be understood.

"The story of 2,000 years of Jewish persecution is a story of inner, spiritual triumph unmatched in history," Mr. Holmes continued. "The Jew is the bravest of us all."

Only non-violent resistance, Mr. Holmes believes, can succeed.

Branded Boy, Only Survivor Of 20,000 Children, Is Coming To America

Peter Dattel is alive and is going to America.

Peter's survival is little less than a miracle, for Peter is the only one left of 20,000 Jewish children of Berlin who were taken en masse to concentration camps in June, 1943. He was about 4 when virtually the entire Berlin Jewish community was moved by the Nazis to torture camps, says the New York Times.

At the camp in Oswiecim, Poland, Peter's father was killed in a gas chamber almost as soon as he arrived, but the boy, although useless to the Nazis because he could not wield a pick and shovel, escaped execution. A woman prisoner said later:

"It was like a miracle to see a child in Oswiecim—one that was alive."

When the camp was evacuated, Peter, whom, it was said, the Elite Guards liked for his blond hair and blue eyes, was with his mother. En route to the Ravensbruck women's prison the mother gave Peter to a Slovak couple, also prisoners. When they were liberated they took him home to Bruenn, Czechoslovakia.

In Bruenn the foster-parents, Mr. and Mme. Barvel Bauer, brought Peter up as their nephew. They told him that they were Slovak and that he should consider himself a Slovak Jew. They avoided any reference to his German origin because Germany and the German language meant to him only concentration camps and misery.

When Peter's mother was finally liberated in 1945 she began a search for Peter through the Red Cross. A few days ago she found him. At the arranged meeting point on the Bohemian border he did not recognize her.

Meanwhile Frau Dattel had been remarried—by an "Aryan" deserter from the German Army—and she is now Frau Ruth Friedhoff. Young Peter, now 7, remembers nothing of his life before Oswiecim but is getting acquainted with his parents and is learning German so he can talk with them. Then he will begin on English preparatory to coming to America.

A cousin of his mother, Josef Foerder, a former Berliner, who lives at 385 Fort Washington Avenue, New York, will be at the dock to welcome the family when they arrive, perhaps four months from now.

There is some question about the stepfather's status, since it does not entitle him to the privileges of a displaced person.

Credit for reuniting the family goes partly to the International Red Cross and the American Joint Distribution Committee, Julius Meyer, chairman of the Victims of the Nuremberg Laws, accompanied them to the border. He was at Oswiecim and once received fifty lashes for having given Peter a pair of shoes.

Peter's memory of the horrors of his infancy is beginning to fade, but not so the number, 124104, branded on his arm; he will carry that forever.

Brooklyn Blue-Eyed Blonde Investigated Columbians For Anti-Nazi League

A slim blue-eyed blonde, eschewing the title of "secret agent" but admitting that "maybe in the full sense of the word I was a spy," told for the first time the story of her recent fight against home-front Fascism. Renee Fruchtbaum, alias Renee Forrest, recalled in an interview her adventures as an investigator for the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League, 1560 Broadway, New York. Her latest victory will result in the trial on February 10, of the leaders of Columbians, Inc., a brown-shirt group of super-patriots, in Atlanta, Ga., writes Judith Klein, in the New York Herald Tribune.

With all the trimmings of an undercover agent, Miss Fruchtbaum was sent by the league to Atlanta last November to find out what the newly organized Columbians, Inc., were up to. Such an assignment was not out of the way for the Brooklyn born and bred young woman. Her interest in a fight for freedom had led her to seek employment in 1944 with the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League, organized by Samuel Untermyer, Francis Biddle and Fiorello H. La Guardia in 1933.

Employed as a secretary and researcher, Miss Fruchtbaum soon assumed the role of investigator. She joined groups of women in her native borough who at that time were agitating for the reinstatement of public school teacher May Quinn; attended meetings of the American Education Association, of which Miss Quinn is honorary president, handed out leaflets and did odd jobs for the Friends of Frank Fay.

Miss Fruchtbaum was soon familiar with faces which reappeared at all such meetings, and when news of Columbians, Inc., reached the league offices, she was briefed for a new job. Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook had started suit to revoke the Columbians' charter but lacked sufficient information to back it. Because the Anti-Nazi League had helped Georgia state officials get evidence for the successful revocation of the Ku-Klux Klan charter, it was again called into action. Professor James H. Sheldon, administrative chairman of the league, assigned Miss Fruchtbaum and another investigator, Mario Buzzi, to the task.

"We knew the Columbians wanted young people," Miss Fruchtbaum explained. "A girl North or Southern, would be useful in drawing young men into the group."

Miss Fruchtbaum—alias Renee Forrest—arrived in Atlanta with Mr. Buzzi, who introduced her to the Columbians' leader, Homer L. Loomis jr., giving various Klan leaders and others as references.

Entrance to the group was easy. "I posed as a bored New Yorker with a private income," Miss Fruchtbaum recalled. "I told them a story in reverse of myself, I guess. I said that as a young person I had always been aware that the Jews and Negroes prevented me and others like me from getting anywhere in this country. I [illegible] French descent, but said, 'Of course I consider myself only an American.' They loved that."

The next day Loomis invited the twenty-four-year-old investigator to the Columbian's headquarters where he showed her fondly stored Nazi trophies and souvenirs. Miss Fruchtbaum's open admiration of the souvenirs soon gained her a secretarial position in the rickety hotel-room office.

Thus she was launched on her life as a "spy." By day "Miss Forrest" kept her eyes, ears and notebook open; she passed her evenings at meetings or the movies; she passed her nights in hour-long telephone reports to Professor Sheldon in New York and was often up until dawn compiling and mailing written data.

Keeping her own counsel, "Miss Forrest" soon became aware of dissension in the Columbians' ranks. She noticed that two buddies, Lanier Waller and James R. Childers, hung around the office as much as possible, avoiding direct participation in the group's street-rioting, speech-making and anti-Negro and anti-Jewish activities. "I'm disgusted," Waller would remark. "People in this town seem to think we're Nazis or something." Were they sounding her out, "Miss Forrest" wondered, or were they dissatisfied?

The showdown came the night of a major rally. To reassure his vacillating followers, Loomis claimed that the newspapers misquoted him to make him appear Fascistic. "Why not let me take down your extemporaneous speech in shorthand?", "Miss Forrest" suggested. As she left for the meeting, Childers gave her a shorthand notebook.

Returning to her hotel room that night, "Miss Forrest" noticed other writing in the notebook. Childers had passed on to her the Columbians' police blotter, a record of where Negroes lived, whether the neighborhood was white or Negro, and so on. The evidence was too important to return and, on Professor Sheldon's telephone instructions, "Miss Forrest" took the next plane to New York, informing Loomis that her mother was ill.

Still unsuspected, Miss Fruchtbaum had several long-distance telephone conversations with the various Columbians. Finally in one Childers confided that he had discovered proof that this was a "crooked organization." He and Lanier had found "real plans to overthrow the government." Without revealing her identity, Miss Fruchtbaum and Professor Sheldon convinced the two to come to New York.

From there on it was clear sailing. Miss Fruchtbaum made several trips to Atlanta, one to work with government officials in convincing other Columbians to turn state's evidence. Just before she left for home she was informed that the Columbians had sworn out a warrant against her on the charge of "usurping police powers."

Miss Fruchtbaum was cleared of the charge at the hearing several weeks ago when it was proved that she was an "observer" rather than an active investigator. "The Columbins' attorney handed me a laugh," she recalled. "He said that it was certainly a shame that a foreigner had to come snooping around under the assumed name of the highly revered Southern General Nathan Bedford Forrest. The general, by the way, was the founder of the Ku-Klux Klan."

CLASS IN COOKERY

PURIM HAMANTASCHEN

For the dough: Mix three yeast-cakes, crumbled-up, with one-quarter teaspoon sugar, and a little warm water. When it has begun to rise, and is a little puffy, add the yeast mixture to three pounds of flour, and one-half teaspoon salt. Then add one cup sugar, four or five eggs, and three-quarters cup oil. Knead together, and then let the dough rise, until soft and puffy. Roll the dough out, and cut in squares; fill, and shape into triangles. Let the pastries stand until the dough is double in bulk, about one-half hour; cover each piece with a little beaten egg, to make it shiny, and bake in a medium oven until brown.

Filling

For the filling: soak one-half pound of poppy-seed in hot water for one-half hour; drain, and soak again, repeating this process three times in all. Then grind, twice, and add to it: one cup sugar, one cup honey, one-half cup raisins, and one-half teaspoon cinnamon.

Her full-length embroidered veil was arranged with a coronet studded with pearl beads, and she carried a white Bible covered with white orchids. Miss Arline Joy Vertlieb, who attended the bride as maid of honour, wore a pink taffeta gown, with headdress of carnations, and matching nosegay. MICHAEL HAS CHANGED!

By Mrs. J. B. Goldhar, Of The Jewish Family And Child Service, Of Toronto

Michael is an extremely attractive eight-year-old, red hair, blue eyes, dark complexion, whose sunny disposition gives no indication of the dark shadows in his life. He has never known his father, nor has his relationship to his mother, Mrs. S., brought him anything but instability.

The fault does not lie with Mrs. S. Little wonder that she radiates no happiness. Hers has been a hard, barren existence. In an endeavour to escape inevitable poverty in Europe and to erase the bitter memories of devastating pogroms, she emigrated to Canada. She married Michael's father after a very short acquaintance and no one was particularly surprised when he deserted her just before Michael's birth.

Mrs. S's whole emotional history is one of frustration, in childhood, in adolescence, in love, in marriage, and in motherhood. In order that she could earn a living for him, she was forced to relinquish Michael to a foster mother. Her frustration manifested itself in acute jealousy of the foster mother to such a degree that the consequent friction necessitated changing the home. In fact, in his short eight years of life, Michael has had nine foster mothers.

Michael's mother has recently suffered a breakdown and her complete separation from him has given the Jewish Family and Child Service the opportunity to seek a new type of home for him, a home where he might take root, with a family who would want him and give him the attention and affection he craved. Such a home has been found and in only six months' time there has been an incredible change in Michael. Michael knows that now he, too, belongs, that he is loved and wanted. His foster parents see him flourish from day to day, and they know that what they are doing is good!

There are other children whose need is great.

By Dr. Harry J. Stern, Rabbi

In The Cause Of Better Understanding And Brotherhood

The Sixth Annual Institute on Judaism for Christian Clergy and Educators held recently at Temple Emanu-El, in Montreal, brought together over one hundred leading Christian ministers and teachers. Inspiring, indeed, were the lectures given before the institute by Professor Abraham Cronbach, of the Hebrew Union College, in Cincinnati. His discourse "Judaism And The Sermon On The Mount" lifted Dr. Cronbach's listeners to great spiritual heights while unforgettable, too, was his address, "The Social Note In Jewish Tradition," when the gifted rabbi expounded the sacraments of charity and learning in Jewish teaching.

At the luncheon session Professor W. A. Gifford, authoritative historian of the United Theological College called upon those in attendance to be sympathetic to the lonely prophetic personalities who are ever hard at work to lift us from the critical situation in which our world finds itself morally.

We founded this institute six years ago as a venture in academic fellowship and in the strengthening of the spiritual insight in Canadian life. And we rejoice that these have brought a splendid harvest of the spirit. Indeed, we know from personal experience that "these meetings of religions" have been all to the good and augur well for the increase of knowledge and increased understanding between church and synagogue. Letters testifying to this benefit were received from Dr. John Astbury and Rev. Father Stephan Valiquette, S. J.

We purposely arrange these institutes on Judaism during February because The Conference of Jews and Christians of the United States has over a long term of years called upon the organized religious forces to observe a week of Brotherhood during this month. I hope some time in the future that the entire month of February will be devoted toward the improvement of race relations and religious fellowship. For religious people of whatever creed must be the exemplars of universal brotherhood.

Canadian Friends Of The Hebrew University

We are delighted with the knowledge that the Montreal chapter of the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University now has an enrollment of eight hundred members. Credit for the Canadian Friends is due to Allan Bronfman, the National Chairman, and Dr. Ezra Ladinski who has served the past two years as president of the local chapter, and their co-workers.

The annual meeting of the Montreal chapter takes place next Tuesday with Professor Sukenik, distinguished archaeologist of the Hebrew University as guest speaker. It is appropriate therefore at this time to point out the import of this our national Temple of learning on Mount Scopus.

The Hebrew University is not only of great import in the life of the Yishov but of the Jewish people as a whole throughout the world. Twenty-one years ago the Hebrew University was opened. At that time there were throughout Europe flourishing centers of Jewish learning. Jewish scientists occupied fine positions in the leading universities of their respective European lands.

But look at the tragic picture today! Jewish academies in Europe are utterly destroyed. Greatest of Jewish scientists have been wandering over the face of the earth due to Nazi barbarism and, alas, today, even in democratic lands, the quota system for Jewish students in universities characteristic of despotic lands is now an established fact.

Hence, the university in Jerusalem is meeting these challenges by a program of expansion. Its program is concerned both with the needs of Palestine and that of our people in the diaspora. Students from all lands are welcomed. After completing their studies they are ambassadors of Jewish Palestine civilization to our brethren of all lands.

The Hebrew University is fast becoming a great stimulant in the revitalization of Judaism and Hebrew culture at a time when that stimulant so urgently is needed. The University's record in its scientific achiement, in the promotion of the agricultural and industrial life of Palestine, are known and recognized the world over.

In 1948 the University Hadassah medical school will be opened. What a boon this will prove for Palestine and for Jewish research workers in medicine! Surely, at this critical juncture of world events the Hebrew University is indeed a beacon light and it symbolizes a great hope and is playing a great part in shaping a new Jewish civilization generally.

We hope that many, many more of the Montreal community will come to identify themselves with membership in the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University.

lief that such measures as the order of the Palestinian Government for the evacuation of women and children increase the present tension in the atmosphere to a dangerous degree.

"We appeal to the British Government not to contribute to the prevalent spirit of strife and bitterness. We reaffirm our request cabled you urging the British Government to initiate a prompt and satisfactory solution of the ultimate problem of government in Palestine with immediate recognition of the need and right of Jewish immigration and land purchase.

"If the British Government takes these steps and ends drastic measures in Palestine such evidence of statesmanlike good-will may, we believe, improve and avoid further deterioration in the present crisis.

work if it meant separating of Jews from Arabs, possibly in a federal or canton state. They might even accept a small Jewish state in part of the coastal area between Tel Aviv and Haifa, consoled by the belief that such a puny state would not survive long and eventually would be reintegrated into an independent "Greater Palestine."

Canadian Jewish Congress Works For Protective Clauses In Peace Treaties

The national executive committee of the Canadian Jewish Congress, of which Saul Hayes, of Montreal, is executive director, finds the clauses to protect the rights and properties of Jews included in the Hungarian and Rumanian peace treaties encouraging but still "very far from being all which we had requested or even all which we consider vital. However, we shall certainly continue our efforts in regard to the other treaties under consideration, particularly with Germany and other instruments for the assurance of the rights of Jews in Europe."

The statement of the Congress executive recalls that "the Council of Foreign Ministers recently met in New York to finalize the recommendations of the Paris Peace Conference. The Jewish people are deeply interested in these deliberations since they dealt with the peace treaties with Hungary and Rumania, where the largest Jewish communities on the European continent now live.

"The Canadian Jewish Congress has been quite vigilant in the matter of the status of Jews in post-war Europe. We have given a great deal of study to the threats facing the Jews of Europe and we have carefully followed the diplomatic developments about the drafting of the peace treaties. Your executive director was instructed by the National Executive Committee of the Congress to proceed to Paris at the time of the discussions of the peace treaties there. The Canadian Jewish Congress joined such other bodies as the World Jewish Congress, the American Jewish Conference, the American Jewish Committee, the Board of Deputies of British Jews, the Vaad Leumi of Palestine, etc., in a joined effort for the defence of the status of the Jews in the countries with whom peace treaties were being drafted. These included Italy and Bulgaria as well as Hungary and Rumania. We were able to agree on a slate of demands which we submitted in a joint memorandum to the twenty-one nations assembled at the Peace Conference.

"In brief, we felt that the problems of the Jews in Hungary, Rumania and Italy revolve around the following points:

(a) Basic guarantees that the Human Rights provisions be included in the treaties and be observed for the protection of the Jewish residents in these countries.

(b) That the properties of which these Jews have been deprived by the Germans and their satellite governments be restored and that where restoration is not possible, the Jewish owners be compensated for their losses.

(c) That the properties of Jews who cannot be located, presumably because they have been killed or exiled, be used for the relief and the rehabilitation of Jewish war victims through the local Jewish organizations.

"We were able to convince the Peace Conference delegations of the necessity for such provisions. After the Peace Conference these efforts of the Canadian Jewish Congress and other bodies continued and a special joint working committee with headquarters in New York did valuable work during the sessions of the United Nations there. Our representations were pressed to the Big Four.

"All reports from the sessions of the Council of Foreign Ministers in New York indicate that the peace treaties with Rumania and Hungary will include a number of the requests which we had suggested:

1. The treaty with Rumania will include specific provisions for the rights of the Jewish population of Rumania.

2. Other provisions assure that the property of Rumanian and Hungarian Jews of which they had been deprived by anti-Semitic regimes will be restored to them. When restoration is impossible, the Jewish owners will be compensated for the losses.

3. A fair assessment of the value of the property of Jews who cannot be located, presumably because they have been killed or have emigrated and do not present claims, will be used for the relief of Jewish war victims through local Jewish organizations.

"In all this work we were fortunate in having the very friendly interest of the Canadian government's diplomatic representatives in Ottawa, Paris and New York."

Brandeis University To Enroll 1,000 In 1948

Plans for the opening of Brandeis University in the fall of 1948 with a college of liberal arts as a nucleus and with a student body of about 1,000 students were disclosed during an inspection of the site at Waltham, Mass.

George Alpert, Boston lawyer, and chairman of the university's board of trustees, reported that almost $1,000,000 had been contributed already by a small group although the formal campaign to raise $15,000,000 for the school had not yet been opened. Several hundred applications from prospective students all over the country also have been received.

An educational advisory committee of perhaps seven leading educators is being formed to choose a president. Mr. Alpert expressed hope the president would be named in the "very near future."

The co-educational university is under sponsorship of the Albert Einstein Foundation, Inc., of New York and will represent what Mr. Alpert described as a contribution of Jews to American education and culture. It will occupy the grounds of the Middlesex University whose trustees turned it over as a gift. Middlesex is virtually inoperative except for a veterinary medical school which has an enrollment of about 100 students, mostly former service men.

The formality of changing the name to Brandeis University in honor of the late Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis is expected to take place before March 1.

money in the 1948 budget for that purpose."

The commander disclosed that recent screening of displaced persons had eliminated 28,000 who were receiving care without being entitled to it.

He also gave assurance that displaced persons would not be repatriated forcibly unless they were war criminals wanted by Allied powers. His assurance, he said, was prompted by a "prevalent feeling of insecurity and fear" among the displaced persons during the screening programs of UNRRA and the Army.
